GUANO ON CORN—COTTON SEED
AS MANURE, &c.

MISSISSIPPI. Editors: Having made a trial of guano on corn this year, with good results, I propose, if acceptable, to give your readers an account of the experiment.

The land on which the guano was tried, was a poor, old, sandy piece of ground, with a clay subsoil, supposed by good judges to be capable of producing ten or twelve bushels of corn, with good seasons. It was accurately measured with a surveyor's chain, by himself and a young man living with him, and found to be something more than one acre and a quarter. The ground was broken up in the winter with rotter on bottom plow, running twice in each furrow, to get it deeply broken. On the 14th February, the rows were laid off three and a half feet apart, and two hundred and fifty pounds Peruvian guano drilled and covered. On the 9th March, the rows were opened with rotter, corn dropped, and covered with two rotter furrows. Owing to cold weather, (there was ice and a light frost on 20th and 21st,) the corn did not appear above ground till 25th March. It was plowed four times, hoeed twice, and each a gill of mixed ashes and plaster put round each hill. The yield was 40 bushels. The guano cost ten dollars. By the ton this quantity will cost you not less than $7.50. I only bought a small quantity, the first, so far as I know, ever used in this country. The yield was ridiculed at first, especially by those who decry "book farming," but several tons will be used next year in this (Columbia) county.

I also tried cotton seed as a manure for cotton this year. The land was a piece of old, red high land, cleared perhaps 70 years ago. The greater part was level, but some of it was rolling land. It measured out 4-9-10th acres, nearly. After burning off the grass, (the land was in corn last year) it was broken up with rotters in January. Rows were laid off 3-4 feet apart with rotters, another rotter furrow run in this, and cotton seed sowed at the rate of 25 or 30 bushels per acre. I regret that the seed were not accurately measured, and I omitted to note, in my farm book, the day they were put in the furrows. I think it was in February. On the seed two furrows were thrown, with turning plows—Bugsler No. 10; and in the turning plow furrows, rotters were run, to break the ground deeply. Thus matters stood, till near planting time, when two more furrows were turned with a Davis 7 inch plow, and the balk broken with rotters. On the 14th April, the beds were opened with a small rotter, and the seed, having been rolled in plaster, were dropped, and covered with the foot. The seed came up tolerably well, and the cotton never died out; in my opinion it will not do so badly when the seed are put in this. The land was plowed five times—first with rotters, second with a small rotter, third with a small rotter, and third scrapers, fourth turning plows, then a small rotter, and fifth with scrapers—hoed twice. Ordinary capacity of the land, not exceeding 800 lbs. I finished last picking this morning before the rain. First picking, 650 lbs; second, 1,570 lbs; third, 2,128 lbs; fourth, 1,000 lbs; last, 851 lbs.—total, 6,199 lbs.—yield per acre, 1,270 lbs. Best acre, perhaps 1,300 lbs. Cost of manure per acre $8.

SWEET POTATOES CULTIVATED IN LEVEL GROUND.—At the Annual Fair of the Southern Central Agricultural Society, held in Macon in October last, I had the honor of laying before the Society an essay on "The Cultivation and Preservation of the Sweet Potato." In that paper I had occasion to refer to an experiment which I made some years ago, with an acre of Potatoes planted from vines (not sprouts) in the level, on the 10th day of June. The product, under great disadvantages, was over 650 bushels. I planted this year a small piece of ground in potatoes, and gave it the same treatment. While I was engaged in writing the essay alluded to (which was about the middle of October,) I had a part of the level ground dug, and found that it promised to yield at the rate of five or six hundred bushels to the acre. This result I reported to the Society. Since frost (which occurred three weeks later) I have harvested and measured the remainder of the crop, in the presence of a disinterested person. The level ground yielded at the rate of 688 bushels to the acre. I have no doubt that this acre of land planted in potatoes early in May, and treated as was the ground on which my experiment was made, would yield from eight hundred to a thousand bushels. My experiment served to confirm me in an opinion which I have long held, viz: That "Red White," or "Bermuda Red," will not bear heavy manuring. A part of the ground was occupied with that variety, and the potatoes were inferior to the yams in size, while the product was much less.

I have always been successful in keeping potatoes in bushes, but this is a slow and laborious business to put them in that way. I propose, if my life is spared another year, to substitute a house for at least a part of the crop. I shall construct my house with slats from the saw mill. Their edges will be straightened and brought together. They will be laid on a low ridge pole, and will be placed at such an angle as will admit of their holding a thick covering of straw and earth. The straw will be laid on next to the slats, and the earth above. The door will be small and close. The whole area of the house will be raised and covered with dry straw. I prefer that of the pine for the protection of potatoes—next after it broomstraw, and where neither can be procured, rice or wheat straw may be made to answer. The art of preserving potatoes consists in keeping them dry, and at an uniform temperature, which should be neither too high nor too low.

Yours truly,
The Watermelon.—A few years ago, my correspondent of the Granite Farmer, I recollected to have seen in some agricultural newspaper, directions for the raising of the watermelon on any kind of soil. It was simply in substance, to sink holes to the depth of about eighteen inches, and about the same number of inches square, in squares not less than ten feet apart. Into these holes place stable manure, mixing it well, about half and half with the original soil. In these places plant the seeds of the melon, covering to the depth of five or six inches. Leave the seeds to rot, and when they come up, thin them out, leaving only one in each hole, and let the time grow, and the seeds will rot, and the melons will be large and sweet.
